paint the ferocity of the attack, the tenacity of the defence, and that seemingly coofused hurling of troops from right to left—from right to left—by which only it was saved to our arms? It will be a marvel among battles. An army, overmatched terribly in numbers, is forced to fight, and secures its positions, on the double-quick, only in time to face to the frent and receive the sheek from an opposing column, arrayed in triple lines, and conjured up by the most insidious eloqueuce to that point where they are content to throw aside their artillery, and rely solely on their bayoness. This battle was to obliterate the noble centre of our Grand Federal Army, stretching from the Atlantic to the Rocky Monntains. The gallaut boys who struggled through this terrible battle, beaten back and confused sometimes, but never losing the hope of final success, should feel flattered fenow that the practised savans who "do" a battle, surmised from all known rules that they ought to consider themselves whipped under the circums ances, and duly reported to he country their sage military decotions.

Chattanooga had fallen—it was presume from the weakness of Bragg's forces, and the inability of the Confederacy to reinforce. Our army was cent in pursuit, the impression being general that Beagg would not fight anorth of the Coesa River. Crittenden crossed near twelve miles south of the city. Thomas crossed at Stephens's Gap, thirty-five miles south of Chattarooga, and McCook through the Valley Hend Gap, ten miles further to the couth. Thomas could not move to Crittenden's position without isolating McCook. All this haprened from throwing an army into an un-guarded pursuit of an enemy who was not running. It would have been easy so have after its evacuation, by simply moving Thomas and McCook back by the left flank. It was a blunder not to do thie, but one which I do not lay at Gen. Rosecruns's door. On the afternoon of the 17th our signal officers discovered heavy clouds of dust around and upon Pigeon Mountains. Mc-Cook's corps, on the right, was thrown into line; also part of the centre. The design of the enemy was no longer a directly in his rear. Massing troops as far as he could to the north, and knowing that our line the day before was twelve or lifteen miles long, and that it did not cover in lorce the point where he expected to turn onr left flank, there is no doubt but that Bragg, at sunrise on the memorable 19th of September, exultingly regained, and then Rosecrans would be com-pelled to cut his way through a vastly superior force, er, after eating up his stores, sur-reoder at discretion. Or, leaving forces enough south of the Coosa river to protect Atlanta, chould Rescerans recklessly head that way with his isolated army, they would be at liberty to move on Nashville at once, and possess whatever territory south of the Ohio river they might desire. By making a demonstration south of Gordon's Mills, which they knew was the left of our scattered army the day before, they expected to pass into Chattanooga almost without resistence.

SATURDAY'S BATTLE. The morning broke gloriously; the heavens were as cloudless as a child's blne eye, and the air fanned nature with the lightest and halmiest of atmospheres. "No battle to-day," said many, as the sun opened a gap between himself and the horizon. Eighto'clock came, and shortly after a distant dull sound touched All still—and they relaxed their head from the inquisitive angle, when two reports followed each other swiftly, like a giant pugilist count-Bragg had his forces massed on his right. The enemy, in this diversion, brought a battery into play, and probably two hrigades of infantry, but Beatty stood brinly, giving our range harassing, limbered up and withdrew. There was no heavy infantry firing at this point. Some of the skirmishers passed Beatty's flank and fired at a conrier who was riding just in advance of General Sheridan's civision on the march.

A little after ten o'clock the battle opened erriously on one of Branuan's brigades. The before a withering fire from another brigade. In less than ten minutes, the rebel right had engaged Branuan, Baird, Johnson, and Reynolds, and a bitter contest had ensued. The enemy (ame up in great waves. charge was directed against their wavering General Thomas and each of the division Generals exerted themselves with almost reck-less bravery to rally the men and reform the unsettled though not defeated line. Reyholds's line at one time was cut in two by the enemy, and the road in his rear seized, but the rebels, by a vigorous rally were forced to re linquish it. Reinforcements were demanded rom the right. Palmer was thrown under fire, and almost simultaneously the robel fire opened toward the centre and involved Van Cleve. Thomas's forces, gaining breath, again advanced on the left, and taking advantage of the heavy engagement on their right, retrieved much of the ground that had been lost, recapturing seven pieces of artillery, and scattering the rebels at every charge.

At this moment Van Cleve became engaged General Sam. Beatty's brigade went straight at them with the bayonet. General Beatty hae a brigade drill of his own. SUNDAY'S BATTLE.

Morning broke cold and dim. A rank fog obscured the camp-fires, and transformed the flitting figures around them into gnomes. The rattling of wagons, the vehcment rumble of caissons, and the low, monotonous words of command were heard in all directious. A heavy white frost—the first, I believe, of the month—shone icily on the grass, as the glow of the mufiled flames touched it redly.

The line of battle was fully established by seven o'clock. The divisions were not in the same older as they went into the fight on Sut-urdey. Some had rallied, and in going back had deflected to the right or left, leaving gaps which other divisions must close. I do not believe that any mortal man can give toe order of each brigade as it was left by the ebb of Saturday's battle. doubling back upon him, fell back just as his troops began to show symptoms of coofusion. Taking a position on a strong ridge, he rallied and inspired his lines, and rode up and down them with drawn sword. When General Thomas flonrishes his sword the danger must be great, for, modest and unaffected as a child, his courage is of that high moral order that shrinks from display. He fights from principle, quietly, stubbernly, inflexibly, and he expects no less of his troops.

I shall not attempt to say who remained with Thomas throughout that day. I shall mention some, however, who should have fore so. The masses of men who drifted brok toward Chattanooga, included hundreds of every division in the army, save Sheridan's, who had been completely ent off. There were hundreds of every division in the army who were with Thomas, and fought with him gal-

From this time Thomas, glorious Thomas, balled them at every point; charge after charge he rolled off with his troops, rein-pirited by Granger's timely brigades. As the almost beyond his old position, regaining on of his most important hospitals.

I finally believe that the sudden giving way of the right divisions insured tho salvation of the srmy. The right had been denuded of troops to reinforce the left. The brave divisions that remained endeavored to close up the gaps on the deuble quick, but many, as I have ions that it mained endeavored to close up the gaps on the double quick, but many, as I have alteredy said, were shot down on the march. Cut uppiccemeal, by the artful massing of the rehels on their own left, they must either have been surrounded or have given way as they did precipitately.

The mained endeavored to close up the gaps of the process of the confirmed and the confirmed of the process of the pro d.d. precipitately.

There is every reason to believe that the sudden disappearance of these two divisions threw the enemy into equal disorder. Some of his attacking brigades were opposed and driven away in confusion; others advanced slowly through forests, expending their ammunition on the vacant arr. At subset on Sunday night, Bragg's lines must have been as curiously disposed as our own.

AFTER THE HATTLE. Night fell, and the bettle of Chickamanga —still s niddle if we attempt to award victory to either side—was over. We had lost ground and gams, but we had terribly punished the energy. Our casualties for such terrific fighting will not be found as heavy as might be anticipated. The loss of the enemy must be fearful. Our artillery was used with tremen-deus effect. The event probably did not use a half dezen hatteries. He had told his in an that this tattle could only be won by the bayonet; but the bayonet has not won it yet.

G'oricus Thomas was the tower of strength that saved the army. On Saturday I saw him that saved the army. On Saurray I saw him for a moment, as the rattle of feeful battle relled in front of his men. Involuntarily I stopped to look at our or the grandest life-pictures I ever saw, though one of the least pretentious. Sitting eo his tranquil horse, watching every sign of the contest with a serene air, that I would have deemed impossible in mortal man in such a scene, I felt a reverence for him steal over me. It was a picture of ineffable courage tempered with wisme of ineffable courage, tempered with wisderu aud gentleness. Angelo would have thrown aside his chief if ho could have seen Thomas as I saw him, the incarnation of many mejesty. The last time I had seen him be was giving a weary straggler on the march patient direc-tion where to find his regiment. He did this with a kinnly and gentle air that struck me at the time as the symbol of the true gentleman. Known even as a boy as "Old George Themas," from the purity and open integrity of his character, it is not strange that Providence selected him to wrench safety, if not haps, of the nation itself.

Where was Sheridan? "Captured" you would have been told that night. But I did not believa it. I had seen too outh of him and his fighting division to credit that story. At midnight Sunday night Sheridan doffed his last to Themas, and reported for duty with more green and more gues than he had carried. more men and more guus than be had carried into the fight originally!

Even after he was cut off he repelled a desperate charge of the enemy, and one of his regiments—the 51st Illinois—captured the luttle flag of the 24th Alabama and the Maenvoring to rally his m n. The General is n aident, practical stadent of roals, as I had ccasion to know while riding with his staff one day, on a march of six miles. I must save gone double that distance before I found that the General was taking his daily lesson in geography. Gathering together his noble dicrectly to the west, as the rebels had pos-session of the country to the north of him, including, for all he knew, every road. Reaching the lop of the ridge he caused the "assembly" to be blown, and picked up ty that other divisions had abandoned, and ock it in charge. In this way ha saved a whole battery, given up for lost by Johnsen. With all that was left of his own division and with a long line of stragglers and addi-tional artillery, he struck the road on top of Missionary Riege, which he travorsed until he found it in possession of the enemy. Qui-etly breaking off again to the west, he advoitpassed the enemy's think, regaining the dand turning east through Rossville, and Thomas by midnight, as I have alrealy indi-

By Monday night the army was all together again and perfectly reorganized. A BIT OF ROMANCE.—The following is a choice bit of romance which has come to light | was il e rich legacy from his father, he adds refineand which is well worth chronicling. A ment of taste and a decided appreciation of the literarominent and well-known physician, who esides in the northern part of Indiana, came | public perception of the benutiful to his art. to this city early last week in company with a handsome, dashing lady, who was the witching possessor of melting blue eyes, hair that fell in rippling ringlets about a wellformed neck, and a furm symmetrical and beautiful as fair Haidee's. The Doctor told not on the immortal cauvas nor survive in beautiful as fair Haidce's. The Doctor told his acquaintances here that she was his wife, and they, not knowing anything of his domestic affairs, and being aware of his fine conversational powers, his noble, manly, personnel, did not wonder at his splendid fortune | faculty to "captivate, delight, and charm." in winning for himself a heing so wondrously fascinating. The happy pair, seeming to disdain all public show and observation, found a private hoarding-house, where they lived a are transmitted to us. The grace of Garrick, the brief time in uninterrupted joy. Each evening they were seen in the dress-circles of the theatres, the observed of all admiring gazers, perfectly devoted to each other. After the plays were over, they would wend their ray through the departing crowd to a hack, lways standing in waiting, and proceed to ir retired boarding-place. Throughout the y they were seen to take frequent hackrides, and the lady exercised freely her prerogative of shopping, the hills always heing liquidated by the devoted, affectionate gentleman. They were extremely happy, to judge from all external appearances, but alas! there was for them a thunderbolt gathering in the sky above their heads that they knew not of. In the midst of treir wild, eestatic hiss, and when they least dr amed of pain, or woe, or these selections a rich intellectual treat awaits then grief, a lady attired in plain black, the sem-At Wood's Theatre last evening the tragedy of Othello was performed. When Mrs. Waller, as Lady blance of mourning, dropped in upon them, and claimed the erring Juan for her real hasband. Macbeth, in her time impersonation on Monday might This was a most unpleasant and unlooked-for predicament for the Doctor, but there was no earthly help for it. He was the mourning lady's husband, sure enough and no mistake, and, exercising the privilege of all wives, she asserted her right to him, notwithstanding the protestations of No. 2 to the cooor the unfortunate disciple of sculapius, and he modified the feelings of the two ladies in the best possible manner. The lady in monrning wept bitter tears of true forrow because of the infidelity of her liege, who should have been true; and with hers he mingled his tears of repentance, askg her, his bosom convulsed with broken sobs the while, to forgive him. Who shall say his repentance was not truthful and sincere? Surely, the tears of the wronged, weeping, loving wife were enough to have moved a heart of stone, and must have touched his conscience, if he had any such an article about him. To make a long story short, the begus wife went North on the first train one day the latter part of last week; and the real band, who seemed to have entirely overcome Lif obstacles in the way of their future happimanner, under penalty of exposure.

It is a very frequent occurrence to find ldiers' arms and equipments in the possession of those who have no legitimate right to them. In many cases they are sold or pawned gralifying some temporary want, perhaps a or's Cassio was deficient in ease and that grace or cravit g apletite for liquor. Everybody should understand that there is a severe penalty attached to the purchasing of such articles from soldiers. Ignorance of such existing regulations will not stay the penalty of the violation, and those found pessessing any portion of a soldier's arms or equipments, will be punished, and to the extent of the order. The Provost Marshal has the matter in hand, and will rigorously carry out the letter of law. From the best information it is in our power to get, we are satisfied the tobacco crop in this State has not been materially injured by the froat. We have solicited answers from correspondents and from farmers, and they all tell us, as far as we have heard, the injury to the standing croo is by no means so great as | Neutrality to be Maintained at all Hazards .larger, hecause of the large planting in every section of the State.

The Probabilities of Another Draft. Sad State of Affairs in Missouri.

Gen. Anderson on the Retired List. Frightful Accident in Nashville.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 29. A serious accident occurred at the convalescents' barracks this morning, by which one man was killed and nine mortally wounded; ninety are more or less injured. All of them were Confederate prisoners, occupying the fifth story of the barracks. While crowding about the staircase the floor gave way; in turn also the fourth and third floors, near the staircases, gave way, precipitating them to the
